Hawai`i's Legal Status Under International Law: Ambiguities and Implications

In response to Law Student concerns regarding the legal status of Hawai`i under International Law, November's Maoli Thursday will illuminate this important issue. A distinguished panel of our Law School's own experts will provide more information regarding whether and how International Law, Human Rights, and War Crimes apply to Hawai`i. In addition, subject matter scholars on a range of issues, including Kānaka Maoli culture and history, have been invited to help answer questions. Please join us!

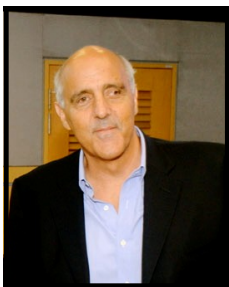

Because this Maoli Thursday was designed to respond to student concerns, it is limited to law school students and faculty and invited guests.

Carole Petersen is a Professor at the William S. Richardson School of Law and the Director of the Matsunaga Institute for Peace and Conflict Resolution. She teaches a range of courses both at the Law School and at the Matsunaga Institute, including International Law, the International Protection of Human Rights, International Law and Disputes, and Introduction to Human Rights: International and Comparative Perspectives.

Diane Desierto is an Assistant Professor at the William S. Richardson School of Law and the co-director of the ASEAN Law and Integration Center. Her teaching and publication interests are in international economic law (international investment, trade, finance, law and development), international human rights law, international humanitarian law, ASEAN Law, and international dispute settlement.

David Cohen is a Professor at the William S. Richardson School of Law and the founding Director of the Berkeley War Crimes Studies Center. Since 2000, he has collaborated on human rights projects in Asia with the East-West Center in Honolulu, a federally funded Asia-Pacific research center. There, he serves as Director of the Asian International Justice Initiative and as Senior Fellow in International Law. Professor Cohen teaches courses in International Law and Human Rights.
